

ORIGINAL

Abstract:

In this dissertation we shall be analysing whether UK policy is doing enough or less for sex trafficked victims. Our main the emphasis will be on women and children. The dissertation will focus on how poor people in Africa, Eastern Europe, Asia and other countries in development transition get trapped in sex trafficking in the UK without their knowledge. Young women from Eastern European countries are brought in to the UK through false promises by the gangs, promising them a better future and better paying jobs. Children are also smuggled to the UK by Gangs as a relief of being brought out of foster caring in their homeland and a promise of better prospects in England but later end up being trapped into forced sex by gangs. From Asia young girls are brought into the UK by gangs under forced marriage and end up being sexually abused and held in servitude. The UK government policy is not doing much to help the cause, from media broadcasting of sex channels to the deportation of failed asylum seekers as a result of sex trafficking. Surely the UK government ought to do more for victims of sex trafficking.

MARKED-UP

Abstract:

~~In this dissertation we shall be analysing whether UK policy is doing enough or less for sex trafficked victims.~~ This dissertation seeks to analyse whether current UK policy regarding the treatment and handling of the victims of sex-trafficking is sufficient, or not.

~~Our main the emphasis~~

~~will be.~~ The primary focus of the document is on women and children, typically disadvantaged individuals from ~~the~~ developing economies, who find themselves trapped in the illegal sex industry in the UK. ~~countries in development transition get trapped in sex trafficking in the UK without their knowledge.~~

Many of these victims are young women from Eastern Europe and Asia, who are lured by false promises of well-paying jobs, a better life, and a more promising future than they might otherwise expect in their homelands. ~~from Eastern European countries are brought in to the UK through false promises by the gangs, promising them a better future and better paying jobs.~~ Children, too, find themselves "rescued" from orphanages and foster care, only to be smuggled to the UK and prostituted. ~~Children are also smuggled to the UK by Gangs as a relief of being brought out of foster caring in their homeland and a promise of better prospects in England but later end up being trapped into forced sex by gangs.~~ Older girls, usually Asian, may find themselves trapped or forced into marriages to men that promptly relocate them to the UK, where the only life they have is one of sexual abuse and ~~From Asia young girls are brought into the UK by gangs under forced marriage and end up being sexually abused and held in servitude.~~

In almost all cases, the victims are procured for the industry by well-regulated and influential criminal elements – the "mafia" of various European and Asian nations – that stand to derive substantial income from the illegal sex industry they support and foster.

It would appear that ~~The~~ UK government policy is not doing much to help the cause, from media broadcasting of sex channels, to the deportation of failed asylum seekers who arrived in the country as a result of sex trafficking. ~~Surely the UK government ought to do more for victims of sex trafficking.~~ This paper investigates the veracity of that claim.

Comment [K1]: It is not only gangs that are responsible for this. In fact, it is more usually organised crime organisations, with the resources – financial and human – to snare and successfully transport victims across borders, and prevent them escaping.

MARK-UPS HIDDEN

Abstract:

This dissertation seeks to analyse whether current UK policy regarding the treatment and handling of the victims of sex-trafficking is sufficient, or not.

The primary focus of the document is on women and children, typically disadvantaged individuals from Africa, Eastern Europe, Asia and other developing economies, who find themselves trapped in the illegal sex industry in the UK.

Many of these victims are young women from Eastern Europe and Asia, who are lured by false promises of well-paying jobs, a better life, and a more promising future than they might otherwise expect in their homelands. Children, too, find themselves “rescued” from orphanages and foster care, only to be smuggled to the UK and prostituted. Older girls, usually Asian, may find themselves trapped or forced into marriages to men that promptly relocate them to the UK, where the only life they have is one of sexual abuse and servitude.

In almost all cases, the victims are procured for the industry by well-regulated and influential criminal elements – the “mafia” of various European and Asian nations – that stand to derive substantial income from the illegal sex industry they support and foster.

It would appear that UK government policy is not doing much to help the cause, from media broadcasting of sex channels, to the deportation of failed asylum seekers who arrived in the country as a result of sex trafficking. This paper investigates the veracity of that claim.